M & M's

Sometimes, hope and history collide. James and John had hoped to sit on seats of secular power but history records that they were executed as enemies of the state. Facts are raw data, but history is a matter of interpretation. Events just happen, but historians try to arrange those events in some meaningful order. But if there is no discernible order, if events don't make sense, then there can be no real history.

Despite tremendous progress in human health, longevity, disease control, safety and quality of life, the industrialized world exhibits a collective sense of depression, a loss of national hope. Europe has been in a cultural funk for decades, devastated by two world wars and dispirited by secularism. America is still energetic, but has lost faith in its historic destiny. Only poor nations seem to have hope and joy in the middle of misery and chaos.

Compare these two images. Picture some impoverished families in Kingston, Jamaica. They spend all day scavenging food from the city dump and then have a community banquet at the base of that putrefying pile of garbage. Alongside that image, picture suburban families in Paris or New York sitting joylessly at a gourmet-laden dinner table. What is wrong with those pictures? And how do desperate people stay joyful in such joyless surroundings? If they balanced good times against bad, they would commit mass suicide. But, of course, we cannot measure the depths of suffering. We cannot calculate real joy. They are not separate quantities; they are successive human experiences. Joy is not some vacuous, inane jollity; joy is sadness overcome, suffering survived, despair conquered.

History is a matter of interpretation. French Jesuit scientist Teilhard de Chardin thought that humankind would progress and improve until it was perfected in the Omega Point who is Christ. German Jesuit theologian Karl Rahner thought that we were just as likely to end in the catacombs. Past history gives us no cause to hope in free, fickle humankind. Dinosaurs were here before us, beetles will thrive after us. We live in between the Big Bang and the Big Chill. Some call our time the Big Nothing, the Big Nada. A collective despair hovers over humanity.

But this very hopeless human situation is precisely when the Good News is vindicated. History has disabused us of the fantasy, that we can save ourselves, so we are forced to turn to our only real hope: that is, God. Only God can make sense of chaos, only God can coordinate the billions of individual freedoms, only God can bring good out of bad, only God can guide history to its divine conclusion. But not without loss and pain. Since God sees infinitely more evil than humans, God has more reason than anyone to despair. Yet, God is joyful. The mystic Meister Eckhart said that God is joyful like a colt frolicking in a meadow!

Hope is hope only when things are hopeless. Joy is joy only when it conquers despair. The Christian view of history is not that goodness overcomes badness; joy is born of hopefulness. We learn that from God's own Son. We must believe that God delights in our very existence; God had high hopes for us and for his world; God is tickled to have us in his life. And all will be well.

(Fr. James Smith)

On this World Mission Sunday we have hope that all that we give to help others will bring some joy to the world and to ourselves. We can also find joy in our willingness to serve one another as Jesus calls us today. What service do you give to the parish at the Sunday Liturgy? You know Mass becomes so much more joyful when we are involved. When you lector, or usher, or serve, or sing in the choir, or greet people coming in for mass. Real joy comes from serving others. What talents do you have to offer for Sunday Eucharist?

SEEKING STATUS IN THE REIGN OF GOD

This Week...

James and John ask an unusual request of Jesus--they want places of honor and high status beside Jesus when he comes into his glory. Jesus tells them that the path to glory leads through great suffering, and like Isaiah's suffering servant, he will suffer for the love of many. Jesus spells out the fate of many of the believers--the martyrs who end up doing the same thing Jesus did--suffering and dying for love. In this way Jesus understands our most profound sufferings and pain.

For Your Reflection

James and John each want to be the "main man" for Jesus. Clearly, they are trying to be "teacher's pets."

- Have you ever tried to become someone's favorite? What was the outcome?
As you can imagine, the others are upset that James and John are trying to make secret deals on the side in order to outrank the rest of the Apostles.
- Have you ever felt slighted by someone else's success at out-ranking you and becoming the favorite?
Jesus is onto their little scheme. He knows what they are attempting, and he tells them that wanting such high status is going to cost them.
- Do you think their scheme worked? Do you think Jesus favored them above the rest?
- Do you think they learned their lesson? What did they learn?
- What do you think the other Apostles learned from this situation?
- What do you think you need to learn from this situation?
