From the Paulpit

Last Monday of course was Constitution Day. In a nutshell, the Constitution outlines how we are to be governed here on the Caymans. In the west, we highly value democratic governments in part because when everyone can participate in their own governance, it goes a long way in helping to promote the rights and liberties of all people. This is important because our freedom and liberty affords us the opportunity to pursue happiness and fulfillment, it allows us the chance to achieve our goals and dreams.

But exactly what is this thing that we call freedom anyway? Many think that the answer to such a question is obvious, and perhaps it should be. But in the present day western world, I think what was once obvious has slowly become a little more murky.

In short, true freedom consists in the liberation of the human person from the shackles of ignorance, oppression and vice. In an article called 'Freedom and its Counterfeit' by Robert George, Professor of Jurisprudence at Princeton University, he writes: "True freedom, the freedom that liberates, is grounded in truth and ordered to truth and, therefore to virtue. A free person is enslaved neither to the sheer will of another nor to his own appetites and passions. A free person lives uprightly, fulfilling his obligations to family, community, nation and God. By contrast, a person given over to his appetites and passions, a person who scoffs at truth and chooses to live, whether openly or secretly, in defiance of the moral law is not free. He is simply a different kind of slave."

He then continues on to say, "The counterfeit of freedom consists in the idea of personal and communal liberation from morality, responsibility and truth. It is what the (United States) founders expressly distinguished from liberty and condemned as "license." The so-called freedom celebrated today by so many of our opinion-shaping elites in education, entertainment and the media is simply the license to do whatever one pleases. This false conception of freedom – false because disordered, disordered because detached from moral truth and civic responsibility – shackles those in its grip no less powerfully than did slavery of old. Enslavement to one's own appetites and passions is no less brutal a form of bondage...It is no less tragic, indeed, it is in certain respects immeasurably more tragic, for being self-imposed. It is ironic, is it not, that people who celebrate slavery to appetite and passion call this bondage "freedom"?"

Freedom never comes easy, and it will surely be lost at the price of ignorance. So as we remember Constitution Day, let us continue the work of advancing the cause of true freedom and liberty. After all, we are very lucky to have these things, as sadly, many in our world do not.

God Bless,

Fr. Paul Ballien

Today's Reading/Gospel: Sending Workers for the Harvest

The harvest master needs workers for the harvest. There are so few workers that the task seems impossible.. But Jesus sends out the seventy- two disciples, in pairs, with confidence. They return in jubilation, welcomed by Jesus with open arms, the way Isaiah describes the welcoming and return to Jerusalem. They seem to do the impossible. But like Paul, they are clearly marked as followers of Jesus, and perhaps, like Paul, they have a few scars to show for it.

A very special thanks to all who made the Farewell Dinner and Dance for Fr. Mike a success.

Thanks to:-

- Sean Collins and his team at mise en place for the great food.
- Celebrations for providing all the cutlery, plates, tablecloths, wine glasses, etc.
- Dave Martins and the Tradewinds for the excellent entertainment they provided.
- Hopscotch Studios for providing sound and musical equipment at a reduced cost.
- Patrick and Celeste Broderick who did a lot of planning and behind the scenes work to make the event actually happen. Also, for donating the door prize that was provided.
- Trisha's Roses for the centre pieces.
- Deanna Lookloy for the plants loaned to us for the event.
- The many parishioners and friends of parishioners who supported us by selling/purchasing tickets and whose presence made the evening very special.
